

ELIXIR HOUR

Coffee Talk, in the Clash Royale universe.

A cosy game that stands on its own — and becomes the campaign's companion at every peak. Built once, re-skinned per edition.

An original fan concept · Not affiliated with Supercell

THE GAP

Live games have a rhythm problem

Between updates the calendar goes flat, and the conversation goes with it. Players don't stop caring in those weeks. They stop having a reason to open the app today.

That trough is where creator and community programs earn their keep. It usually gets filled with a countdown, a meme, or a "what do you want to see next" post.

The Arena Herald

The calendar is the product. Right now the gaps are empty.

THE INSIGHT

The cast is the asset nobody's serving

Clash Royale already has the thing most games would kill for: people love the characters. Clash-A-Rama built years of affection for the Knight, the Hog Rider, the Princess — as people with lives, jokes and grievances.

Then Clash-A-Rama ended, and the big character moments became limited-time campaigns that come and go. Between fights, the arena is all players get.

The parasocial asset is already paid for. It just has nowhere permanent to live.

Wizard

Princess

Knight

P.E.K.K.A

Hog Rider

50M+
views

Clash-A-Rama — 50M+ views in two weeks, hundreds of millions across two seasons.

THE PRODUCT

Elixir Hour, in 30 seconds

You play Sage, keeper of a bar that serves Elixir on the neutral strip between the Blue and Red kingdoms. A fighter comes in after their duel. You read their mood, brew and serve the right drink, and the conversation opens.

No combat, no fail state, no rush.

Built & playable now

- 3 Nights end to end
- 7 languages
- A full Tome
- Music & sound
- Saves your night

Recipes, character Ledger, the Arena Herald, a Songbook.

You can play this in your browser right now – a real build, not just a deck.

WHY IT ISN'T COFFEE TALK RESKINNED

Three things an ordinary cosy game can't do

1 A live-ops companion

When a season or event is running, the in-game newspaper — the Arena Herald — retells it as bar gossip. The live game, reflected inside the bar. Only a game attached to a live game can do this.

2 You brew tomorrow's news

Between events the story stands on its own, and it remembers what you did. One drink — the Knight's, on the last Night — changes the next morning's Herald. Serve him right, he wins at dawn; serve him something loud or bitter, he loses. Coffee Talk forgets every drink. Elixir Hour remembers.

3 Unlock through relationships

The Knight teaches you his usual. P.E.K.K.A shares a tune from her phonograph. Each character's Ledger page fills in as you get to know them, with Sage's own notes in the margin — richer than a wiki, because it's personal.

THE FORMAT ECONOMICS

Built once. Swapped per edition.

Built once, never again: Sage, the bar, the brew mechanic, the engine.

Changed per edition: a new arena, a cast themed to that locale, a story tied to whatever campaign is live. The marginal cost of a new edition is content, not code.

"Edition 1 took a production. Edition 2 took a weekend — new venue, new story, same engine, same cast. That's the format."

Edition 1

"Neutral Ground" · Royal Arena · the starter five · a full production.

Edition 2

"Away Night" · a pop-up bar at a different arena · same cast, one new scene, one new Night · a weekend.

The share moment is built into the game, not bolted on afterwards.

THE CREATOR ENGINE

Every player share is an ad.
Every streamer gets a clean ending.

Night Cap share cards. At the end of every Night the game composes a parchment postcard — the Night's title and the real date, who visited as mini card thumbs, the drinks you poured as tankard icons, one spoiler-safe quote, logo and link. One tap to save and share.

Cameos

Resident-regular creator cameos — a creator voices or fronts a recurring regular.

Recipe UGC

Players share the brews they discovered.

Stream beats

Spoiler-safe: each Night ends on a shareable moment by design — no awkward fade-out.

ONE FORMAT, EVERY TEAM

The creator angle leads, but it isn't the whole pitch

CREATORS & COMMUNITY

Night Caps, cameo residencies, recipe UGC, spoiler-safe beats.

LIVE-OPS

The quiet weeks between updates covered; a companion beat shipping with every season, at near-zero marginal cost.

MARKETING & BRAND

The Herald as an owned in-fiction channel: any real campaign, retold as bar gossip within a day.

IP & NARRATIVE

A permanent home for the cast between campaigns; new Nights grow the lore without waiting for a screen slot.

PLAYER INSIGHT

The optional layer is a signal: re-opened Ledger pages, the tune left playing, tone choices, which Night Caps get shared. Each edition's cast is its own test of who can carry a season.

THE LAUNCH PLAN

Beats mapped onto the season cycle

Tease

Herald clippings released as social posts in the run-up — bar gossip that hints at what's coming.

Launch

Ships with a season drop, so the companion arrives when attention is already high.

Sustain

Weekly edition updates keep the Herald current and give players a reason to come back between fights.

Amplify

Creator moments — cameos, Night Cap shares, recipe UGC — seeded across the cycle.

What success looks like — targets for Edition 1

Clash-A-Rama drew 50M+ views in two weeks and hundreds of millions across two seasons — the cast's pull is proven. Coffee Talk proves the cosy format sells and travels to mobile (an estimated 370k+ copies; on iOS and Android since March 2026). Edition 1 is the test of whether that pull becomes a daily habit between fights.

BETWEEN-UPDATE ENGAGEMENT

the thesis

25%+

Return on a non-event day

10+ min

Median session length

50%+

Finish all three Nights

AMPLIFICATION

20%+

Completed Nights ending in a shared Night Cap

2,000+

Player UGC in the launch window

100+

Creator videos in the launch window

CREATOR HEALTH

50+

Creators featuring Edition 1

60%+

Creators opting into Edition 2

REACH & SENTIMENT

1M+

Unique players in the launch window

15%+

Players new or lapsed

70%+

Cast-sentiment positive on tracked mentions

Edition 1 is a read, not a verdict: it sizes the opportunity, it doesn't price the whole franchise. "A first edition sizes the opportunity. It can't price the whole franchise — and shouldn't pretend to."

A clever idea that can actually ship

Notice

Fan-content compliance

Made in line with Supercell's Fan Content Policy. No Supercell code, art or copy used; the characters are affectionate homage in the spirit of Clash canon and Clash-A-Rama. Non-affiliation notice is in-product.

Tone risk

A cosy game inside a competitive one is a real question, not a given. It's answered by making the companion optional and additive — a second reason to open the app, never a tax on the first.

Scope discipline

Exactly one brew in the whole game changes an outcome — the Knight's, on the last Night. Holding it to a single consequence keeps the build small enough to ship and protects the "no wrong answers, just relax" feeling. The discipline is knowing what to leave out.

Where it goes next

Now

Edition 1 playable — 3 Nights, 7 languages, a live "Today's Edition" tracking the real Clash Royale season.

Next

Edition 2 "Away Night" as the fast-follow — the format proof, shipped in days.

Phase 2

Native mobile. Coffee Talk came to iOS and Android in March 2026 — the format sells there, and that's where Supercell's audience is.

Beyond

A new edition per campaign: build the house once, move new residents in per launch.

"Same time tomorrow?"
— "Yes."

The game's last line is also the promise: if the format works, there's always a next Night.